

Understanding Secularism | Easy and detailed Notes for class 8th

Introduction:

Think about making friends. You don't start by asking about religion or caste, do you? But what if religion mattered most in our country? Imagine every introduction starting with questions about beliefs. It's a curious idea, isn't it? Luckily, our laws prevent that. As students, let's learn about secularism in India—where the government treats all religions equally, promoting unity in diversity.

What is Secularism?

Secularism means keeping religion separate from the government, ensuring fairness for all beliefs. It guarantees equal treatment regardless of religion, allowing everyone to practice freely. This encourages fairness and ensures that people of all faiths can coexist peacefully without government interference.

Why is it important to separate Religion from the State?

While the reason for the separation of religion from the government is evident from its meaning, grasping it with examples is crucial. The reasons are:-

1. To stop the tyranny of one community: The separation of religion from the government prevents the dominance of any one community, ensuring fairness for all.
  - For example, in a secular democracy, laws are not based on any particular religious doctrine, allowing people of all faiths to be treated equally under the law.
2. For the freedom to interpret: the separation of religion from government allows individuals to understand beliefs without interference.
  - For example, in a secular state, people can practice their faith freely without the government favoring or imposing any specific religion.
3. To bring Harmony among different religion: When people enjoy equal treatment without government intervention, agitation diminishes.
  - For example, in a secular society, government neutrality respects diverse beliefs, fostering peaceful coexistence.

What is Indian Secularism?

Indian secularism maintains “principled distance” from religion, allowing some government involvement, ensuring harmony.

There are three objectives in Indian Secularism:-

- Inter-religious secularism: It prevents domination of one religious community by another.
- Intra-religious secularism: It ensures equality within religious communities.
- Religious freedom: It safeguards individuals' religious freedom.

Indian ways to prevent domination of particular group or religion:

1. Strategy of distancing: The government stays neutral in religious matters to avoid bias.
  - For example, the government provides public holidays for religious occasions without favoring any particular religion.
2. Strategy of non interference: The state refrains from interfering in religious matters to uphold individual freedom of religion.
  - For example, Sikhs freely wear turbans.
  - Muslims observe daily prayers without interference.
3. Strategy of intervention: The government intervenes to safeguard humanity from harmful religious activities, ensuring peace and safety for all.
  - For example, the government has intervened to eradicate practices like untouchability, widow immolation, and triple talaq.

Secularism in USA, France and India:

- In the United States, the First Amendment says the government can't support any religion. So, public schools stay neutral and don't promote any religion.
- In India, they believe in treating all religions equally. That's why public schools celebrate different festivals from different religions.
- In France, they have a rule called laïcité. This means public schools don't allow students to wear anything that shows their religion. They do this to make sure everyone feels equal at school.
